MONITOR: BIN LADEN'S SON THREATENS REVENGE FOR FATHER'S ASSASSINATION

The son of Osama bin Laden has threatened revenge against the U.S. for assassinating his father, according to an audio message posted online. Hamza bin Laden promised to continue the global militant group's fight against the United States and its allies in the 21-minute speech entitled "We Are All Osama," according to the SITE Intelligence Group. "We will continue striking you and targeting you in your country and abroad in response to your oppression of the people of Palestine, Afghanistan, Syria, Iraq, Yemen, Somalia and the rest of the Muslim lands that did not survive your oppression," Hamza said. REUTERS

INDIA'S MODI IN SOUTH AFRICA FOR TALKS WITH ZUMA, TRADE SUMMIT

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi met South Africa's President Jacob Zuma on Friday to discuss boosting investment and trade, in a continent where India is playing catch-up to its Asian rival China. Modi in October hosted the leaders of 54 African nations, including Zuma, in the biggest India-Africa summit, promising $10 billion in credit to back a "partnership of prosperity." Modi, who arrived from Mozambique, is also due to visit Kenya and Tanzania. "Indian companies hold strong business interests in South Africa. About one-fourth of our investment in Africa are in this country and there is potential to expand our business ties," Modi told a media conference before a business summit between the two countries in the capital Pretoria. REUTERS

MERKEL EXPECTS NEW BRITISH PM TO LAUNCH FORMAL EU EXIT TALKS

Germany expects Britain to trigger article 50 of the European Union's Lisbon treaty to begin the formal process of leaving the bloc once it has picked a new prime minister, Chancellor Angela Merkel said on Sunday. Merkel also told German broadcaster ZDF in an interview that Britain would not be allowed to "cherry pick" what it wants to keep from its EU membership while jettisoning aspects of the relationship that it does not like. "The decision [of Britons to leave the EU] has been taken and the next step is — and Britain will do this only when they have a new prime minister — to invoke Article 50," said Merkel, Europe's most powerful leader who will play a key role in shaping London's future relationship with the EU. REUTERS

High heat and humidity could fire up severe storms by midweek. GETTY IMAGES

HEAT WAVE TAKING NORTHEAST OUT OF THE COMFORT ZONE

Get ready, Mother Nature is getting locked and loaded to send some pure heat our way along with a pretty good chance of severe storms, with the highest potential for midweek to late in the week.

The core of the heat and the longest running will be centered across Philadelphia and southern New Jersey, where the heat wave should kick in by Wednesday and last through early next week. Seven to eight days of 90-plus temperatures will take a toll on the entire region. The exception will be the Jersey Shore, where afternoon winds skimming off the cooler Atlantic will hold temperatures in the low to mid-80s.

New York City and central and northern New Jersey will be get into the heat wave as well, with readings hit-

Bolaris' Weather Watch

JOHN BOLARIS

ting the 90s by Wednesday, which should pretty much hold around the 90-degree mark through the weekend and into early next week.

The arrival of the heat and humidity will be marked by possible severe storms for Wednesday and again by late Thursday or Friday. Humidity levels should be reduced some for the upcoming weekend. However, the atmosphere cooking range should hover near 90 or just above.

The place to be will be the Long Island beaches, facing the South Shore as afternoon sea breezes will feel oh so good. The Hamptons where they pay for cooler temperatures will see the mercury hovering in the more comfortable lower 80s.

Lucky Boston should see the mercury only kiss 90 degrees on Wednesday with readings pretty much holding in the uncomfortable upper 80s with a good deal of humidity from Wednesday through Friday. Storms should fire up on Wednesday and Friday as well, as the Capes will enjoy glorious afternoon sea breezes.

So in summary, the first serious stretch of a prolonged heat wave is taking aim at Philadelphia and New York City as we move into mid-

Boston

Today: Morning clouds, then some sun, High 73

Tuesday: Warming up, High 86

Wednesday: Hot and humid, afternoon or evening storms, High 91

Thursday: Warm and humid (isolated storm) High 87

Friday: Severe threat, High 88

Weekend

Saturday: Humidity drops, sun, High 84

Sunday: Clouds and sun, High 85

week, with the crux of the heat wave centered in Philly.

Comedian announces plans to crash Boston's 2017 mayoral race

Internet character Larry Nabisco — as portrayed by Dicky J. Stock — announced his plans to challenge Marty Walsh next year.

CHRIS CAESAR
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Look out Marty Walsh — your 2017 re-election bid just got a whole lot harder. Or weirder, at the very least.

Boston comedian Dicky J. Stock is known for his internet-driven publicity stunts. You might remember him from the time he encouraged his fans to demand that the MBTA Police Department name its new K-9 officer "Mr. Spaghetti" (they went with "Hunter"), or the time he started a (to be clear, false) rumor that WCVB reporter Mike Beaudet drank his own pee.

But now the prankster is turning his eye to public service — in a way. Stock, in the spirit of performance artists like Andy Kaufman or Stephen Colbert before him, announced plans for one of his eccentric online characters to run for mayor or this week.

Stock's thousands of followers are well-acquainted with the antics of his characters Kimberly Strubell, her "open-relationship boyfriend" Leonard "Larry" Nabisco and son, Kent Strubell. Each have their own Facebook profile and play with the dynamic of Poe's Law:

the internet adage that bizarre parodies are often indistinguishable from the honest-to-God weirdos who also post online.

The comedian first started toying with fake Facebook profiles by creating Strubell, a play on a certain kind of Massachusetts stereotype. Her blunt, braggadocious, typo-laden posts are also meant to evoke that kind of uncomfortable Facebook friend we almost all have: someone from our distant past, or with whom we have an otherwise fleeting connection, whose car wreck of a life we can now follow online thanks to social media.

Then came her boyfriend Nabisco, who Stock said presents as more of a classically absurd character. His biography includes a stint in the Coast Guard, writing credits at Nickelodeon and Highlights magazines, and later climbing the ranks at Build-a-Bear Workshop to become a regional manager at the company.

"Kimberly Strubell is probably about 30 people I know," Stock said. "Larry is just silly."

Silly or not, Stock said Nabisco is "very serious" about his run for mayor, and Stock will be serving as his campaign manager. And, of course, as an official campaign spokesman, on account of Nabisco being a Facebook character.

"You probably won't see much of him," Stock explained. "He's a very private person. ... If Mayor Walsh would like to debate, he can debate me."

"Mr. Nabisco decided to run for mayor because of the political climate in Boston right now," Stock explained. "I think it really calls for someone with his style of leadership to pull us out of the gutter we're in right now."

One area he'd tackle? The T. Stock said Nabisco would usher in a "renaissance within the MBTA," a feat his prospective administration would accomplish by "probably getting rid of everyone that works at the MBTA."

"Kind of like in a dictator fashion, he'll tell the trains where to go," Stock said when pressed for specifics. "If they can't do it, well — then that conductor gets fired."

Stock said he has every intention of making a serious attempt to get on the ballot this year, even posting a video of himself calling Boston City Hall to inquire about the process. To the employee's credit, he manages to keep it professional the whole time.

Stock will face a few hurdles: aside from Nabisco not being a real person, he is a resident of Rockland — a town about 22 miles south of Boston — which won't pass the residency requirement.

But Stock isn't so sure. "Mr. Nabisco considers Rockland just as much a part of Boston as Dorchester," where Walsh lives, Stock said. "If [Nabisco] needs to live in Boston, he can crash on my couch, and I live in Allston."

Your move, Marty.

51 goats have new homes after record surrender for the MSPCA

Just two months after receiving its largest surrender of goats in the organization's history, the MSPCA announced that all of the 51 in the flock were adopted to new homes.

All but 10 have already been delivered, the animal protection group said in a statement Friday.
The last of the goats should leave the MSPCA-Nevins Farm in Methuen by next week.

"Unexpected large surrenders are always a challenge for us because it just means there are so many new animals to settle in, as well as making room by shifting the living quarters for the animals already in our charge," Nevins Farm barn manager Gia Bars said in a statement.

"But this is what we do: We take these animals when no one else can, we nurse them back to health and do all we can to ensure they end up in safe forever homes."

The goats in the group included adults, kids and babies, Bars said.

The animals were surrendered to the organization after the original owner became overwhelmed by the size of the flock. CHRIS CAESAR

The oldest living American has died.

Goldie Michaelson, of Worcester, was only a month short of her 114th birthday when she passed away Friday, the Associated Press reported. She was reportedly frail and confined to a bed in the final stages of her life.

Michel was born in 1902 in Elizabethgrad, Russia (now Ukraine), and moved to the United States as a young child,
according to the report.

Michaelson, who received a master's degree from Clark University, was asked about the secret to her longevity in an alumni magazine in 2010:

"Walking," she says
while sitting in a comfortable chair in her Worcester home. "I was a great walker — four or five miles every morning, weather permit-
ing. I never used a car if I could walk. One of the great joys of life was when I sold my car."

Her son-in-law, Leonard Minsky, seated nearby, pipes up. "Goldie, what about the cigars
and whiskey?"

She laughs and waves her hand. "He's just kidding. I never smoked or drank." Then she adds in a semi-conspiratorial tone, "But I do love chocolate. Lots of chocolate."

A small theater on the campus is also named in honor of the drama lover.

ican? New Jersey resident Adele Dunlap, age 113, according to the AP.

Derek Jeter finally settles down

One of America's most notorious bachelors is finally off the market, as this week retired New York Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter married his partner of four years, model Hannah Davis. The two were wed Saturday in Napa, California, according to the New York Post, in a small ceremony of less than 100 guests — only three of which were Jeter's former Yankees teammates. Jeter, 42, has long held a reputation as one of the world's most prolific

Casanovas, previously having been attached to everyone from Mariah Carey to Minka Kelly. "The Captain" retired after the 2014 MLB season and proposed to Davis in October, a few months after the couple made their public debut at the 2015 Met Gala. Davis, 26, is a former Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Issue cover model, and wore a custom Vera Wang gown during the ceremony. Friends have said they expect the two to begin a family in short order. Sorry, ladies.

Are Kim and Kanye on the outs?

Gossip, gossip. There's just no way to stop it. Everybody knows it's an attention-grabbing monster. Rumors of discord between Kanye and Kim Kardashian West surfaced this weekend when Radar Online scored photos of the celebrity couple looking somewhat listless while walking daughter Nori to a playdate. They reported that KimYe are having — of all things — sex troubles, and that a rare but potentially court-avoiding "mid-nuptial agreement" has been worked out, with a divorce potentially forthcoming; citing sources. Celebrity stories attributed to blind sources are Hollywood's second-biggest export, and might be best read as literally as horoscopes, but what can factually be reported by the paparazzi pictures is that Kanye West wore sweats, a chain and his customary facial expression, while Kim wore a black dress and leggings, and sunglasses. America's favorite family to hate still looks like they always do: famous.

Beyoncé and Jay Z cheer on Serena Williams at Wimbledon

This weekend's batch of lemonade came out more sweet than sour, as music's most speculated-upon couple made a powerful, unified public statement in support of one of the world's most accomplished athletes. Beyoncé and Jay Z were in the building as tennis superstar Serena Williams won her 22nd Grand Slam title at Wimbledon on Saturday, watching the action from the player's box while wearing matching white ensembles. Queen Bey has seen fit to let her ongoing marriage speak for itself, even posting photos of her recent family vacation on her site. Serena Williams played a prominent role in the visual component to the "Lemonade" album, as well, and this weekend's showing, indicating that all is well in the king ... er, queendom.

The actress and filmmaker learned how to turn feline for "The Secret Life of Pets."

GREG CWIK
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

In the animated comedy "The Secret Life of Pets," Lake Bell plays Chloe, a voluptuous, pampered cat. (The marketing team isn't calling the cat "fat" or "chubby" or "tubby," though there are several throwaway jokes about her girth preventing her from doing nimble cat things in the movie.) The actress and filmmaker is editing the marriage comedy "What's the Point?" (It's her follow-up to "In a Word...") and in real life, she's a dog person. But she's open to switching teams.

So, are you a cat or a dog person?
If I'm being honest, I'm going to have to say I'm a dog person, but that's only because it's what I know. I grew up with dogs, in a house of rescued dachshunds, so that was just my reality. That said, I'm not prejudiced against cats. I think they're great. I'm really coming around to them. In my house, I'm constantly telling my husband I want a cat, but he's like, "Nope," because he is staunchly a dog person.

You have experience being a cat now. You're an expert. You can pretend you're a cat and show him what it's like.

Oh, I know. I may do that as a way of campaigning to get a cat, though I don't think Chloe is a good example of why we should invest our time in that. But a rescue kitten is a way in. I'm trying to get my daughter to fall in love with a rescue kitten and then he has to say yes.

Did you ever catch your dogs doing anything superweird, like in the movie? Throwing parties?

Yeah! My sort of dog partner in life, for 15 years, Margaret, a rescue pit bull, she passed away only a few months ago — she was truly special and incredible and so funny. Amazing comedic timing. I had these three white poodles, and if you sat down they would all three jump in your lap at once. One time I was on set and I closed the door. There was a little hole in the screen door. One of the poodles jumped through the hole, so lo

Real talk

Do you know the film "The Lobster?"

I know it but I haven't seen it yet because I'm editing my own film. I live in a cave.

Well, what animal would you want to be if you had to be an animal for the rest of your mortal life?

I think it would be a cat. Then everybody leaves you alone, and I can sleep all day, be up all night. If you left me to my own devices, and if I didn't have a kid to take care of, I would totally stay up all night and sleep all day. I do feel cat-like. Also that thing when they fall from really high distances and they kind of recover? That's pretty cool. I want to do that.

and behold, I see this white poodle running at me — then two, three poodles running at me. Then, alas, I see Margaret, my big, brown pit bull, trying to get through the hole, getting her head stuck, falling down the stairs. She saw these poodles do this with grace, and she tried to do the same and ... failed. In a tremendous way. It's one of the most special visuals I have of my pet.

Amber Rose says she's no stranger to being called a "slut." The model and activist has been dealing with that word's ugly assumptions for more than 15 years, and today takes the initiative to fight the social stigma and let young women embrace their sexuality.

Rose hopes to continue the movement through "The Amber Rose Show," a weekly talk show premiering July 8 on VH1. The series, produced by Dr. Phil and Jay McGraw's Stage 29, features Rose and celeb friends discussing parenting, relationships, friendships, pop culture, race and entrepreneurship. She chatted with us about the show, this year's SlutWalk and all those nasty little rumors you spread about her.

Can you tell us more about the VH1 show?

It's going to be really fun. We'll have a sex therapist and we'll talk to audience members and have callers call in to ask relationship questions. We'll try to answer questions to best of our ability. I'm going to have celebrity guests come on, and they can talk about what's going on in their life and I will interview them as well.

Any hints as to who the celeb guests might be?
Not yet. I love the element of surprise.

Speaking of female pioneers, what's your relationship with Amy Schumer? Are you friends?

We're definitely friends, but she lives in New York and I live in L.A. so we don't really see each other like that. When we can, we hang out — and obviously, we work together. I've done her show twice and did the MTV Movie Awards where I got to make out with her, which was awesome. She's a great kisser.

You were the driving force behind L.A.'s edition of the SlutWalk last October. What can we expect from this year's event?

Well, there's definitely more awareness. I did so much press for my

Amber Rose speaks the truth

Amber Rose is more than just Kanye West's ex-girlfriend. VIA COM

SlutWalk, and it was just very frustrating because it was mostly guys. This year one of my dear friends, French Montana, donated a percentage of the proceeds from his album to my SlutWalk. He believes in it and he understands what I'm doing for women. He has a mom and a good relationship with his family, and he wanted to jump on board and show that men can be involved.

Do you feel like slut shaming is still an issue?
Slut shaming could go on forever, just like racism. So we need to change people's minds. Not everyone can be as aware, and that's unfortunate. That's where I come in.

It's crazy that I'm a feminist but my entire crew is men. I have one woman working for me and it wasn't on purpose. I think God did that for a reason, because all the men who were extreme slut-shamers started working for me and now they're all about the SlutWalk. They know proper etiquette and what not to call a woman and how to treat a woman. They live a different life now because they work with me and they're my family. They're enlightened.

You've said that you want a second child with Wiz Khalifa — does that mean you're possibly going to get back together?

It'll just take time, and things can happen. And if not, we have a beautiful son together. We're going to be friends and family forever no matter what. If it happens, it happens. If it doesn't, it doesn't. We're just going to try and see what it is.

You've been linked to names like Nick Young and Chris Brown, among others. Do you see any future with these men or are you strictly friends?
I've never dated, kissed or had sex with any of those guys. I don't know Nick Young that well. I've seen him out a couple times. He seems like a good, nice guy, but I really don't know him. Chris Brown is like my brother. I did one of my first music videos with Chris Brown back in 2009. We have never been romantic at all. I hang out with a lot of guys and I'm very close to a lot of guys, and people just assume that I literally have sex with them all day, and it's not like that at all.

"The Amber Rose Show" premiered July 8 on VH1. It airs Fridays at 11 p.m. ET.

Why your career needs a board of directors jobs & education

One mentor won't cut it in a world where job hopping is the norm.

JENNIFER SAWYER
@ItsJenSawyer
letters@metro.us

We've all been told about the professional importance of having a mentor. So why not take that a few steps further and build your own "board of directors"?

Career coach and strategist at SoFi Rachel Kim advocates for just that — building and maintaining strong relationships with a number of advisers who have diverse skills. "Careers are no longer just a straight path, so it's important to have a variety of different experiences you can call upon for advice and support," she says.

Not sure where to start? Here's how to establish and use your own personal board.

Pursue a diverse skills set

You might be tempted to fill your board with contacts solely within your industry, but it's important to connect with a diverse range of people who can help you grow. "The easiest connection to make is someone like you," Kim says. Reaching out to people with different experiences, skills and personalities can stretch your brain and shift your perspective, not to mention help you identify your "blind spots."

Think beyond your professional life

"Professional and personal is becoming blended," Kim says. "Every aspect of your life plays a role [in your board selection] as well." Always wanted to learn more about art? Reach out to an expert who can help you explore your creative side. Seeking out others who help cultivate your interests will only enhance your professional performance.

Regularly re-evaluate your goals

"Every year, take a step back to assess your goals and assess your board," Kim suggests. Were you able to invest enough of your personal time to make the relationships effective? Are you hoping to achieve something new and different than in the past? It might be time to make a shift toward new board members or away from others, but that's not a bad thing. It just means a larger network!

Put in the work ... even when everything is great Even if things are going well professionally, don't neglect the relationships you've developed. Take time to cultivate your board even when you're on the upswing. "It's the best time to broaden your networks and learn from each other," Kim says. That way, when you really need support and advice, you'll have people to turn to.

Don't forget about "wish list" members

Many of us might wish we could have Oprah as our own personal life coach. Though some experts are simply out of reach, that doesn't mean their advice is off-limits. "It's OK to have somebody you know enough about, but you don't know face to face," Kim says. If there's a public figure whose experience you trust, add them to your board's roster and think about what advice he or she might offer.

Pay it forward

"No matter what stage of your career you're in, there are always opportunities to give back to others," Kim says. If you've personally benefited from having a diverse set of mentors in your life, consider those who might be in need of your expertise or guidance, and return the favor!

When learning is child's play

Tinkergarten, an innovative play-based program, helps children develop empathy, creativity and self-reliance simply by letting kids be kids.

A trained Tinkergarten leader guides the student in a task. TINKERGARTEN

ALISON GOLDBERG @MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Venturing into the great outdoors is a planned activity nowadays, especially for children. But Meghan and Brian Fitzgerald, co-founders of early childhood education program Tinkergarten, wanted to change that by making unstructured play more accessible to kids.

"One thing we really stress is sensory engagement, and a lot of our activities focus on rich sensory experiences," Meghan explained.

At Tinkergarten, outdoor play is considered a fundamental aspect of growing up. Children 18 months to 8 years old are encouraged by trained leaders, typically parents, to participate in activities that help strengthen qualitative skills like empathy, creativity and self-reliance. Tinkergarten activities include devising flower potions, creating mud, building bundles of sticks and making paint out of natural berries.

Sessions for younger children range from a half hour to an hour, and are thematically designed and given names like "Outsmart a Leprechaun" and "Rebranding Play-Dough." Parents may find some of the activities a little outside of the box, but the sessions are clearly structured and linked to concrete skills. After all, Tinkergarten's mission is to present situations that are "somewhat challenging for kids."

When parents and caregivers attend the classes, they learn how to give their children space and allow them to struggle through somewhat difficult situations.

The Fitzgeralds started Tinkergarten as a side project in 2012 after Meghan, a former teacher and elementary school principal, saw a major flaw in the system.

"There's a universality about play, and when given the space and time to do it, that's how children learn," she says. "There's a lot of research [linking] play and really important basic capacities or skills like memory and focus, language and social skills."

Meghan began offering classes in Brooklyn's Prospect Park, and the concept caught on. The program grew organically, expanding to 25 states.

Brian, a consumer-products developer with a concentration in educational technology, took a personal approach to the creation of Tinkergarten. "We have three daughters — 6, 3 and 1-years-old — and the time that we have with them is so precious. The good news is we're running a company now that we get to play with our kids and develop a curriculum."

The play-learning connection

Tinkergarten does not adhere to state education standards or serve as a substitute for traditional preschool and kindergarten classes. However, there is "parallel linkage" between what children learn in the outdoor sessions and standard elementary school classes, according to the Tinkergarten team.

"We don't have early childhood standards like the Common Core, but there's more focus on readiness skills, and a lot of them are social and emotional," Meghan explained.

After becoming parents, the Fitzgeralds' main goal became to reintroduce the significance of play to their three children. They used their own offspring as guinea pigs before the launch of Tinkergarten.

"There are some trends regarding the lack of play that we noticed that were really worrisome to us," Meghan said. "I knew what kids needed. The habits of mind and spirit to be really happy and effective learner, friends and members of the community in school."

Maybe adults can learn something from their children about how to let loose, enjoy the outdoors — and play.

Red Sox All-Star break report card

The Sox are near the top of the AL East standings but things are far from perfect.

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

The Red Sox are at the unofficial halfway point with the All-Star break underway. The team will be well-represented in San Diego for the Mid-Summer Classic, but for a good portion of the team it will be a week to rest and get back to full strength from a health perspective.

The break is also a good time to pass out a few grades:

A-

Offense

The Red Sox' offense is what has saved the team so far this season. They own the best offense in the American League and are evolving into the best offense in baseball. They have been led by a number of players including Xander Bogaerts, who hit his 10th home run of the season on Saturday. He now has the most homers and RBI before the All-Star break for a Red Sox shortstop since Nomar Garciaparra in 2003. David Ortiz is also having a tremendous season, despite being 40 years old, and the excellence doesn't end there — Dustin Pedroia, Mookie Betts and Jackie Bradley Jr. are all having above-average seasons.

C+

Pitching

Poor pitching is what is holding this team back from being a sure-fire World Series contender, but it hasn't been as bad as some people have made it out to be — especially considering all the injuries they have had to deal with. Steven Wright has been one of the biggest surprises in baseball, being named to the AL All-Star team, and Rick Porcello has bounced back nicely from his tough first year in Boston with a strong first half. David Price has been the biggest disappointment, but he's shown signs of turning things around of late. All things considered, the bullpen hasn't been as bad as it could be. Matt Barnes and Heath Hembree have emerged as potential high-leverage pitchers.

B-

Coaching

For as much criticism as John Farrell has received so far this season, the Red Sox are still right near the top of the AL East standings after back-to-back last place finishes. There's no question some of his in-game decisions are worth criticizing, but some of them have been undeserved. The manager cannot do anything about a starting pitcher giving up four runs in the first inning. Overall, Farrell has done a decent job to this point in the year and people should look to the run the team has gone on since their miserable 21-2 loss to the Angels a week ago. Being able to bounce back off a loss like that is the sign of a good team, and one that has trust in its manager.

Finishing strong

The Red Sox (49-38) closed out the first half of their 2016 season by sweeping the Rays at Fenway Park this past weekend. The Sox head into the All-Star break in second place in the division, trailing Baltimore by two games. GETTY IMAGES

PICK UP THESE PITCHERS

With Clayton Kershaw and Zack Greinke both hitting the disabled list, many fantasy owners are looking for reinforcements for their pitching staffs. There's no replacing a Cy Young winner, of course, but these pitchers can help ease the sting of losing one — and they're all widely available on the waiver wire in both ESPN and Yahoo leagues.

For even more options, be sure to check out RotoBaller's waiver wire rankings assistant tool, which is updated daily.

Anthony DeSclafani, Cincinnati Reds

DeSclafani was in line to be the Reds' opening day starter, but an oblique injury cost him the first two months of the season. While he showed visible rust initially, DeSclafani has been excellent in his last three starts, posting a 1.66 ERA and 0.88 WHIP with 19 strikeouts against just three walks. His overall numbers as a rookie last season are underwhelming at first blush, but DeSclafani's peripherals down the stretch were excellent after refining his curveball. During the final two months, he ranked in the top 15 pitchers in K-BB% — and he's picked up right where he left off.

KYLE BISHOP

Kyle Bishop is a lead MLB columnist at RotoBaller.com. His articles and Fantasy Baseball Rankings are your secret weapon for winning fantasy leagues.

Junior Guerra, Milwaukee Brewers

A 31-year-old converted catcher who was out of organized baseball earlier this decade, it's safe to say that nobody expected Guerra to be a factor in 2016. Yet here we are: Through 12 starts, he's 6-1 with a 2.93

ERA and 1.02 WHIP. If he had enough innings to qualify, his 22.3 K rate would rank ahead of such notables as Johnny Cueto, Greinke and Carlos Martinez.

Bartolo Colon, New York Mets

At age 43, Colon just keeps finding ways to get the job done. He won't give you many strikeouts, but the ratios have been tidy this year (2.87 ERA, 1.17 WHIP) thanks to his usual excellent control. Colon has allowed more than three runs only once all season, and has produced a quality start in seven of his last eight outings.

Jon Gray, Colorado Rockies

Despite a recent "dead arm" scare and some issues with the long ball, Gray has been solid lately. Since getting knocked around by the Cardinals on May 19, Gray has produced a 3.58 ERA and 1.10 WHIP in eight starts, striking out nearly a batter per inning. He also hasn't struggled at his notoriously unforgiving home park, pitching to a 3.00 ERA and 0.93 WHIP with a strikeout-to-walk ratio of nearly 7.00 in his last four turns at Coors Field.

So long, Sully?

Jared Sullinger's time as a Celtic is likely over as the team renounced their qualifying offer to him Sunday, making him an unrestricted free agent. Sullinger averaged 10.3 points per game last season. GETTY IMAGES

Bartolo Colon has been a steady force for the Mets. GETTY IMAGES

Aries Don't make a hasty decision. Your emotions will cause you to be erratic, leading to problems that will be difficult to fix. Put your energy into taking care of your health and money.

Taurus Partnerships look promising. Whether trying to work with someone you love or a colleague, your intuition will guide you in the right direction. Plan a special celebration.

Gemini Keep an open mind, but also be observant of what others are up to. Someone will try to coax you down a questionable path. Don't fold under pressure.

Cancer Ask questions if you are uncertain about something. Don't feel the need to make a change just because someone else does. Invent your own way of doing things.

Leo Your serious attitude will surprise someone banking on your free spirit and generous nature. He or she will try to persuade you to leap out of your comfort zone. Protect your money.

Virgo What you offer will be appreciated. Someone you meet will contribute information that will help you make profitable domestic and lifestyle changes.

Libra Refuse to let situations bring you down. If you look beyond what is going on around you, you will find a way to make a positive change that will improve your personal life.

Scorpio It's a good day to take or plan a trip. If you focus on the things you do best, good things will happen. Romance is featured, and a change at home will make your life easier.

Sagittarius If you network and ask questions, you will avoid making a mistake due to a lack of knowledge or someone's misrepresentation of what's expected of you.

Capricorn Partnerships will have to be handled with care. Emotions will surface if you are insensitive to the needs of someone you work with or love. Look for an amicable solution.

Aquarius Put your best foot forward in order to turn a profit. A yard sale, new job or change to the way you offer your skills and services will pay off.

Pisces Don't hesitate when you can take advantage of whatever comes your way. A financial opportunity is apparent. Expense management will help you stabilize your life. EUGENIA LAST
